CONTENTS

Welcome to the latest issue of Llygad Llŷn – the Llŷn Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty's annual newsletter.

2021 was again a difficult year for many of us because of the pandemic. Although the situation improved during the summer the Omicron type of virus emerged towards the end of the year and cases and restrictions increased again. However, when writing this piece at the beginning of 2022 things are looking better. Hopefully, then, 2022 will be a year where restrictions will end and people will again be able to get together to meet, socialise and work together.

In this issue of Llygad Llŷn you will find information on environmental projects, the Sustainable Development Fund, local features of interest and the winners of the photography competition held last year. There are also articles on the anniversary of the National Coast Path, Historical Information Points and the new GwyrddNi project.

We are very keen to hear your views on Llygad Llŷn and the work of the AONB Unit. We would also like to hear your ideas for new projects that would benefit the Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty or things that you think need attention. Contact us by all means by email, website, telephone or letter.

History Points Quick Response (QR)

While wandering around the coastal area of Llyn you may have noticed these small green plaques. They are "History Points" plaques for obtaining historical location information using a smartphone. All you have to do is scan the QR code on your mobile phone and site information will open up on a web page. As well as information there are interesting old photos to see.

The AONB Unit has co-operated with the History Points project by translating the information on the Llyn sites into Welsh and suggesting additional sites for plaques.

Here are examples of the information provided on some sites in the AONB:

Near Llanbedrog you will find the story of two men from the Llyn Peninsula who were hanged in 1629 for drawing a French ship onto the rocks to be wrecked.

In Porth Colmon you will find the story of a shipwreck in 1901, when the Stuart, a ship that was carrying whiskey and pianos, was wrecked on the rocks. It happened at Porth Tŷ Mawr (also known as Porth Wisgi "whiskey") And by the time local authorities arrived, much of the ship's cargo had disappeared. Rumour has it that the sound of tinkling glass was heard in several pockets of Pen Llyn's residents after this incident.

Other interesting history points are to be found in Abersoch, Aberdaron, Nant Gwrtheyrn, Porthdinllaen and Porth Ysgaden and many other sites within the AONB.

So remember when walking the coastal path to look out for these small HP plaques! For more information visit - <https://historypoints.org/>

Capital Projects

For several years, the 5 AONBs and 3 National Parks in Wales have received grants from the Welsh Government towards environmental projects. The grants are linked to a fund known as Sustainable Landscapes, Sustainable Places (SLSP). For the 2021-22 year the grant was aimed at towards capital projects related to decarbonisation, sustainable tourism, biodiversity/nature recovery, and resilient and green communities. Resources were secured from the fund to support four capital projects in the Llyn AONB:

Improvements to the quay area at Trefor

The Quay at Trefor is a historic structure built for the export of granite stones from the Eifl quarry nearby. In the past a large hopper to load stone from the Quarry was located on the Quay but the building was torn down in the 1980s. The old concrete on the surface of the Quay was left rough and uneven and pieces of old iron were breaking through in some places. The grant was used to remove the old uneven surface on part of the quay, and resurface with concrete, as well as the addition of some new benches. The area is now a more attractive and pleasant place to be – people can enjoy the atmosphere of the sea, and spectacular views in all directions. Funding from the grant was also used to tidy up and resurface the car park near the Quay, therefore making parking more convenient.

Refurbishment of Nefyn's beach toilets

Nefyn's beach toilets are located on the edge of Lon Gam which leads down to the sea. The toilets were in poor condition, the building itself was untidy and the facilities inside were dated. Grant money from the fund was used to completely refurbish the toilets. There has been collaboration between the AONB Unit, Gwynedd Consultancy and Highways, and the Municipal Department to make this project a reality.

Porth Meudwy Track Repair

Porth Meudwy remains an active port, used by local fishermen and is a starting point for trips towards Bardsey Island. During the winter of 2019-20 part of the track (which is a public right of way) was damaged by a landslide following heavy rainfall. The edge of the track was lost in many places and it wasn't safe for vehicles to pass. A portion of the SLSP grant was used as a contribution towards phase 2 of the repair work on the track down to Porth Meudwy, the work was completed in the summer of 2021.

Improvements to a series of public rights of way in the AONB

Another project was to upgrade a series of key public rights of way within the AONB. After discussing with the Senior Rights of Way Officer, it was agreed that a number of locations would benefit from improvements:

Footpath number 13 Clynnog, in the Tai'n Lôn area.

Footpath number 38A Llanengan near Abersoch Golf

Footpath number 89 Aberdaron near Tŷ Lôn, Uwchmynydd

Footpath number 46 Aberdaron, Cadlan area

Bridleway number 16 Pistyll, near Llithfaen

A number of improvements were made to these right's of way, including removing vegetation/overgrowth, improving drainage, installing small bridges and installing new, more convenient gates therefore improving access. Walking is good for one's health, and is an opportunity for people to enjoy the natural environment and nature. Hopefully these improvements will facilitate greater use of the routes.

Tan-yr-Allt House Aberdaron

One of the Cynan's (Albert Evans Jones) most famous poems is "Aberdaron". It is a four-verse poem, often summarised in two. The poem describes the poet's desire to retire in a remote cottage, "with nothing in front of his door but the rocks of Aberdaron and the wild waves of the sea". He imagines how living there would echo emotions which he felt in his youth. For years people have been speculating the whereabouts of this cottage. It is now believed to be Tŷ Tan yr Allt, a cottage near the coast path between Aberdaron and Porth Meudwy. This location appears to be the exact spot that Cynan mentions in his poem.

Cynan was born in 1895 and wrote the poem in the early 1920s. For those of you who are fans of the band Bwncath, it is Cynan's poem which forms the basis of the song called "Aberdaron". Cynan was born in Pwllheli, and he was educated at Pwllheli Grammar School, and at the College University of North Wales. After graduation he joined the army during the First World War, where he served in the Welsh Company of the Medical Corps, as an ambulance man and then as a chaplain. The horrors of the war had a great impact on him and had influence on his poems.

Later in life, Cynan is reputed to have remarked that he had wanted to buy the house but had limited means as a Methodist minister and was outbid by a wealthy English industrialist. The ruins and the land here now belong to the National Trust.

Friends of the AONB

The Friends of the AONB group was set up in 2021 to give volunteers an opportunity to assist with practical work within the Llyn Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty. The group meet up around once a month, focusing mainly on work like cutting overgrowth, path maintenance and litter picks along beaches.

AONB friends

So far the group has been assisting to improve the features of the AONB by improving an access route to Ffynnon Saint (an historic well) in Rhiw, cutting back overgrowth on a footpath near the chapel at Llithfaen and litter picking at Hell's Mouth beach. We are very grateful to the crew for their time and effort to help maintain and enhance the special features of the AONB, they truly make a difference – Diolch yn fawr !

Ffynnon Saint

This historic holy well is on the route used by pilgrims who were heading for Bardsey Island, across the Bardsey sound from the Llŷn Peninsula. It stands just below a Neolithic stonework site on Mynydd Rhiw where axe blades and other tools were forged from stone. There are several historical sites and ancient monuments close to Rhiw.

Recently the trees either side of the path towards the well were cut down and resulted in restricted the access to Ffynnon Saint from the direction of Tŷn y Parc, due to overgrowth and branches obstructing the route. With the help of the Friends of the AONB, clearance and repairs were carried out to the path, and now there is good access to the site once more (if you are planning to visit please bring suitable clothing and footwear, as the path can still be muddy at times!).

The structure of the well itself is 9 feet square, and the thickness of the walls is around 2 feet. There are two sets of stairs leading down to the well, it made getting into the water much easier. Because of its importance the well is designated as a grade II Listed Building by Cadw. The walls and steps are impressive, and worth a visit. Apart from the visual attraction, there is a feeling of peace and tranquillity near this historic well.

It is likely that the well even pre-dates the 6th century saints which passed by on their pilgrimage. Ffynnon Saint was one of a chain of holy wells along the pilgrim's path, and a welcome sign that the pilgrims were on the right track.

John Jones (Myrddin fardd) refers to Ffynnon Saint in his book "Llên Gwerin Sir Gaernarfon" (1908). In it he states It was customary for women on Ascension Thursday to go to the well to wash their eyes and throw a needle into the water as a sign of gratitude.

Celebrating the Wales Coastal Path's 10-year Anniversary

On the Llŷn Peninsula the Wales Coast Path follows the AONB's coastline from Aberdesach on the north coast to Carreg y Defaid near Llanbedrog in the south. The path has been developed and improved over time and follows the coast as closely as possible. The Coast Path provides a great opportunity to see and enjoy the beauty of the Llŷn coast – including a variety of beaches, sea cliffs and the islands.

The Wales Coast Path was launched on the 5th of May 2012, and the Path celebrates its 10th anniversary this May. Many local celebrations will be held throughout Wales during the year. The celebrations in Gwynedd will be held during the Spring and Summer, with a walk along a section of the coast and several guest speakers. Official books on the Coast Path are already available in English, but now the guidebook for the Arfon, Llŷn and Eifionydd area is being translated into Welsh, and will be launched during the event.

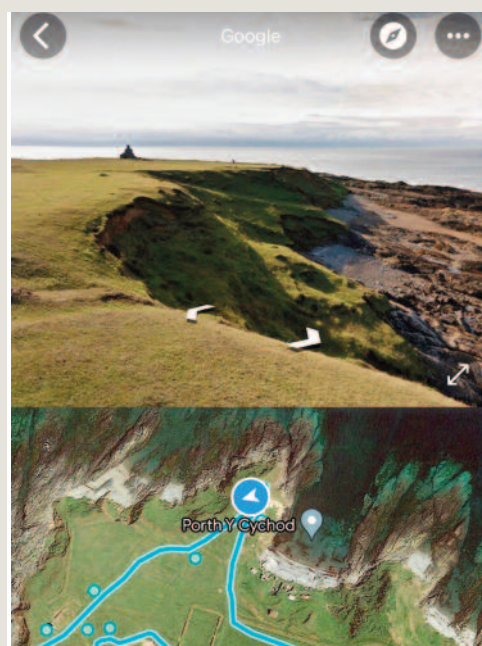

The Coast Path digital experience

Back in 2019 the Wales Coast Path was successful with a bid to hire the "Google Trekker". The Trekker is a camera pack which takes continuous all-round images which can be used to create a real life walking experience. The best way to describe the Trekker itself is something similar to a rucksack with a circular form extending above - this consists of 16 cameras taking pictures in all directions every 3 seconds. The Trekker weighs about 25kg which is about as much as a bag of cement! The Trekker needed to be carried whilst hiking along the path and the team managed to walk 97% of the Coastal Path in Gwynedd.

Although some were critical of this idea and said things like "it's better for people to get up off the couch and head out to walk", the project was considered a success and especially beneficial to people with walking difficulties or disabilities. It is a great opportunity for people to enjoy the magnificent scenery who otherwise wouldn't be able to.

Once the data was collected with the Trekker it was sent back to Google to be published on Google Maps. The results were very impressive, and the images displays the coast in all its glory. It's very simple to use, once Google maps is launched via the internet, there is an option to zoom in into a certain area and using the yellow man symbol and drop on the map, this will then open the 360 view. The virtual walking experience can move along the path in any direction.

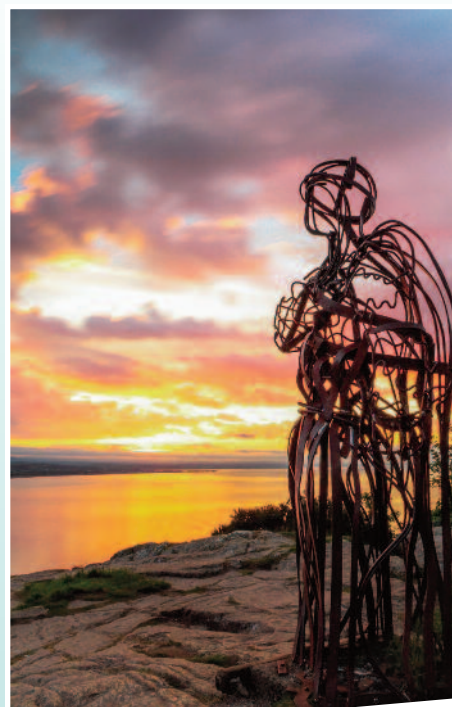

Photography Competition 2021

Every two years the AONB Unit holds a photography competition, entry for the competition is free and the winners receive gift vouchers, up to the value of £100.

The theme of last year's competition was "Llŷn i mi" (My Llŷn"). We had a high number of entries, and the judge had a difficult time choosing the best photos. This competition gave candidates the opportunity to show the stunning features of the Llŷn Peninsula, and simultaneously encourage others to appreciate this beautiful area. In terms of the content of the pictures, we received a huge variety – wildlife features, on land and at sea, beautiful landscapes, and the dramatic coastline.

A high percentage of pictures displayed the coastline as a theme in this year's competition, which emphasizes the importance of the sea to the Llŷn Peninsula, as it has a significant influence on the character of the area. On the cover of the magazine you can see a striking photo of Ynys Fawr, near Trefor, taken from a kayak by Steve Evans. This photo was the winner of the photography competition. You can find this scenic spot to the west of Trefor along the coastal path. The photo of the Starfish within the seagrass in Porthdinllaen, as seen below, was taken by Jake Davies, this photo was awarded second place in the competition.

In third place was Dafydd Hughes's picture of the iron statue at Llanbedrog. This statue can be seen on the headland south of Llanbedrog, again along the coastal path. It's placed on a site where a ship's former figure head stood in the 20th century. The current sculpture was commissioned by Gwynedd Council as part of the millennium celebrations, and is the skilled work of artist Berwyn Jones and blacksmith Hugh Jones, both originally from Llanbedrog.

The Llŷn AONB Sustainable Development Fund

sustainable development fund

..... What is it?

This is a Welsh Government Fund, and each AONB in Wales receives this money to allocate it to various projects in the community. Successful projects need to encourage sustainability, and contribute positively to communities in ways that are environmental, economic, social and cultural.

..... How much money is available

The Fund can contribute up to 75% of a project's total costs. Some projects require as little as £100, with others asking for some thousands. It depends on each project.

..... Who can apply

Any group, committee, trust or society can apply for funding. Therefore there are many examples of past successful projects, such as from schools, community councils, community shops or taverns, young farmers' clubs, fishermen's' associations and village hall committees. Individuals can also apply as a private applicant – as long as their project reaches the criteria and includes the wider community.

..... How do you apply?

We strongly encourage you to contact us to discuss any ideas before getting a copy of the guidelines and application form. We accept applications all year round. Applications under £3,000 are decided upon by the Llŷn AONB Unit staff. Applications for larger sums are decided upon by our Grants Panel. The Grants Panel area sub-group of the Llŷn AONB Joint-Advisory Committee.

..... How can I get more information?

We share a lot of information about projects that have been supported on Instagram. You can follow us on @ahnellynaonb

You can also contact staff from the Llŷn AONB Unit to discuss any ideas. Under the current circumstances, the best way to contact us is by e-mail:- ahnellynaonb@gwynedd.llyw.cymru

PROJECT NAME: NEFYN'S ANCHOR
Applicant: Nefyn TOWN COUNCIL
Grant: £2450

The main objective of this project was to retrieve an old anchor from Pistyll beach, and to display the anchor for the public to see near Glanpwll, Nefyn. The anchor was incredibly heavy, and it took 8 individuals to load onto a boat. Once ashore the anchor was taken to Tudweiliog where a local blacksmith repaired the damage caused by years of erosion. It is an anchor from an old sailing ship.

This anchor will remind everyone of the close connection between the residents and the maritime and fishing industry in Nefyn. A connection that goes back to the Mesolithic age. The fishing industry and maritime industry is a vital part of the area's heritage, and continues to be to this day.

The Playground in Llithfaen is an important social resource. It's a place for children and young people to gather, play, socialise and keep fit. It is also a location for parents and other family members to meet and socialise whilst the children are playing. It is located close to "Tafarn y Fic". Sadly, the playground was in very poor condition, the centre of the park was waterlogged, and access was very poor as a result. The first step of the project was to drain the playground of excess water by installing drains across the site. The second part of the development was the creation of new tarmac paths from the entrance, and around the park's equipment. The paths were set up as means of improving access for children and people with mobility problems, but also as short cycle routes for children and young people in the village.

PROJECT NAME: CAE CHWARAE LLITHEAEN
Applicant: Llithfaen Playground Committee
Grant: £8,834

PROJECT NAME:
MONITORING WILD GOATS

Applicant: Nant Gwrtheyrn
Grant: £6,560

Wild Goats have been wandering between Pistyll and Trefor for a very long time, there is a high probability that you see one of them if you walk along the coastal path between these areas (you will most likely smell them before you see them!). The belief is that the goat population has increased over the years, and it is said that they are more daring and are willing to travel further. The main reason for the increased population, is the mild winters we've had recently, and therefore the growing season has extended, and less of the young goats perish over the winter. The objective of this project was to count the goats between Pistyll and Trefor, to monitor the population growth, and to check if the goats were healthy.

Unfortunately, there is a threat that the goats are overgrazing, and if so the biodiversity of the area could be impaired, and also it could be a possibility for the goats to starve due to the lack of food. The methods used to count the goats were drones, and trail cameras. Students from Bangor University and GWCT were responsible for the management of this project. For many years Natural Resources Wales has been the counting the goats in this area, and report counting around 70-80 goats each time. At this year's count these numbers have more or less doubled to a total of around 140 goats, this is a considerable increase.

PROJECT NAME:
BWS ARFORDIR LLŷN

Applicant: O Ddrws i Ddrws
Grant: £16,200

The Llŷn Coastal Bus is a well-established project that has been running for many years, giving the opportunity of locals and visitors alike to enjoy the stunning coastline of the Llŷn Peninsula. Recently this service has been upgraded and is operational on a time convenient to you. To use the service, you will have to download the Flexi app. Once the app is on your device, you will be able to book a slot, and the bus fetches you from a certain point close to your location, and takes you to your destination of choice (within the Llŷn Peninsula of course). It's a great opportunity for people who do not have access to a vehicle to explore the stunning coastline of Llŷn. For those of you who want to walk along the coastal path, the bus provides the opportunity to leave your car in a certain location and arrange for the bus to take you back to your car. O Ddrws i Ddrws is responsible for running this service.

PROJECT NAME: DINAS DINLLE AND LLŶN

Applicant: Gwynedd Archaeological Trust

Grant: £9,950

This project involved the excavation of a coastal hillfort near Dinas Dinlle, the work was done under the guidance of Gwynedd Archaeological Trust. During the excavation, historic buildings from the Roman era were found. One trench revealed a large, well-preserved roundhouse, which seems to have been occupied during the Iron Age and the Roman period. The outside diameter was approximately 13.5 meters, and the thickness of the walls up to 2.5 meters at some places. The other trench revealed several structures that were slightly confusing, which requires further work to fully understand them.

Unfortunately the northern side of this site is slowly being eroded by the sea, so it is essential to carry out research on this hillfort before it disappears. Dinas Dinlle is just outside the AONB boundary of course, but the significance of a historic site like this is extremely valuable. Volunteers, archaeologists, and local school children were all involved in the interesting research carried out here. This was a highly educational project, and many local schools attended the site to learn about archaeological work. Indeed, one of the rarest artefacts found on the site was discovered by a primary school girl. She came across a flint core, an item that was used to create a fire. The hope is to carry on with the work next year.

The Nature Recovery ACTION PLAN FOR GWYNEDD AND LLŷN

2019 was a turning point in recognising the escalating nature emergency and stepping up action for biodiversity. Wales also declared a climate emergency, with Gwynedd Council following suit in March 2019. In response the National Nature Recovery Action Plan was published and part 1, “Our strategy for Nature”, setting out the commitment to reversing the loss of biodiversity in Wales and the objectives for action (The Nature Recovery Action Plan for Wales 2020 to 2021 (gov.wales)). Since then, the Welsh Government has also declared a nature emergency in June 2021.

Following on from this, Welsh Government have asked each Local Authority, National Park and Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty across Wales to produce their own Action Plan, detailing how each area should approach nature recovery. Gwynedd and Llŷn AONB have decided to produce a joint Action Plan, which will not only aim to address the national objectives, but also address those environmental challenges and concerns closer to home. For instance, when the communities of Llŷn were asked what is good about their area during recent consultations for the Ardal Ni project, it was noted that “Environment and proximity to natural attractions e.g. mountains, the seaside and the countryside” scored the highest. We want to ensure that we have a plan in place which ensures that our communities and local residents across Gwynedd and Llŷn can continue to enjoy and benefit from our own natural world.

The Action Plan itself is a policy document we are producing that will aid in the recovery of nature in Gwynedd and the Llŷn. The document is aimed at a wide range of stakeholders, partners, groups and individuals who have an interest in nature recovery or are key to it. We will be holding consultations aimed at various groups starting at the end of spring this year (2022). The outcomes of these consultations will be used to lead and initiate action towards nature recovery in Gwynedd and Llŷn, so we would urge you to participate where you can.

For more information on the Nature Recovery Action Plan, visit the Wales Biodiversity Partnership website by clicking the following link: Wales Biodiversity Partnership – Nature Recovery Action Plan (biodiversitywales.org.uk)

Pen Llŷn a'r Sarnau - New projects in the SAC!

new projects in the SAC

The Pen Llŷn a'r Sarnau Special Area of Conservation (SAC) is a marine protected area stretching over 230km from Nefyn on the north coast of the Llŷn Peninsula, to about a mile north of Aberystwyth. Areas such as these are designated due to their habitats and species that are recognised as important on an international level – further confirming that Pen Llŷn a'r Sarnau is rich in natural wonders.

Here in the SAC, we are busy working on many conservation projects to help improve the environment and restore the area's marine wildlife. We are incredibly pleased to announce that, in partnership with other agencies, we have just started work on two new and exciting pan Wales projects called Natur am Byth and Seagrass – Ocean Rescue.

Both projects are funded by The National Lottery Heritage Fund and are currently in a development phase. The aims of these projects are to improve the environment through working in partnership with local people, communities, and different agencies for the benefit of our communities, the environment, and the natural world.

As both projects are currently in their initial stages, we are busy talking and consulting with people and local communities to develop an effective plan to shape the direction of these projects. The support and expertise of local people is vital to the success of any project – so if you are interested in getting involved, voicing your opinion, or helping to steer any of these projects, we would love to hear from you. Here is some more information on the new projects that are underway:

Natur am Byth – Marine Treasures

Natur am Byth is a large-scale project that runs across the whole of Wales. It encompasses eleven smaller environmental projects, all of which share one common objective – to restore a variety of specific and distinct species that are at risk of extinction in Wales.

This project is extremely exciting, with important work being undertaken to conserve a wide range of marine and terrestrial species such as the; Snowdon rainbow leafbeetle, lesser horseshoe bat; water vole; and chough – just to name a few.

As part of Natur am Byth, the role of the Pen Llŷn a'r Sarnau SAC team is to work specifically on a sub-project called Marine Treasures that aims to help restore marine species such as crawfish, native oysters, pink sea fan and seagrass whilst also working towards monitoring and improving water quality.

This is an extremely ambitious project, and as the project evolves, we hope that plenty of volunteering and wildlife learning opportunities will emerge to help support the project and to protect some of Wales' most vulnerable species.

Seagrass – Ocean Rescue

It is a well-known fact that seagrass not only supports and promotes biodiversity but is also important in the fight against climate change. Seagrass is a special plant, with many benefits for the health and well-being of humans too. However, over the last century, seagrass meadows across the world have declined and have virtually disappeared off the coast of Britain.

Seagrass – Ocean Rescue aims to re-seed an area of 10 hectares of seabed off the coast of the Pen Llŷn and Anglesey with seagrass. This will support these marine areas to transition back to their former healthy native condition, with positive impacts on local climate and biodiversity.

Were you aware that many small fish use seagrass meadows as their nursery ground? And so, with the increase of seagrass along our coastline there will also be economic benefits locally as numbers of commercial fish that inhabit our local waters increases.

However, re-seeding 10 hectares of the seabed is a huge undertaking – so again, it would be great to hear from you if you have the time to take part in some vital conservation work. Please also get in touch if you have any information or expertise that would be useful to us, or if you have any queries whatsoever regarding this project.

GwyRDDNi

Pen Llŷn

Have you heard about GwyRDDNi? There has been a lot of talk locally about the new movement that's been set up by the following six community enterprises in Gwynedd: Datblygiadau Egri Gwledig (DEG), Ynni Llŷn, Cwmni Bro, Siop/Griffiths, Partneriaeth Ogwen and Cyd Ynni.

The movement, which is funded by the National Lottery's Community Fund, aims to support communities in Gwynedd to take local action to tackle climate change. GwyRDDNi intends to do this by bringing people together in Community Assemblies on the Climate in five areas: Pen Llŷn, Bro Ffestiniog, Dyffryn Nantlle, Dyffryn Ogwen and Dyffryn Peris, working with the local partner in each area.

Following weeks of recruitment to encourage individuals to register an interest to attend their local assembly, 50 successful candidates are selected to attend the assemblies to represent the wider community, the selection based on demographics such as age, gender, ethnicity and opinions too – attitude towards climate change for example. No previous knowledge or experience is needed to attend, you only need to be ready to listen and to share your views and ideas.

A series of four assemblies will be held in each area, or various sessions equivalent to the same number of hours e.g eight shorter sessions, with the first Pen Llŷn Assembly being held in Ysgol Botwnnog School on Saturday the 2nd of July this year. A number of guest speakers will join us at the assemblies to share their experiences and ideas, and field trips are also on the cards. Following the learning phase, the assembly members will have time to discuss, deliberate and decide together what might work locally, and what they want to see in Pen Llŷn's Climate Action Plan. The second part of the project will be to deliver the plan.

It's possible you've already been selected as one of the members, or maybe you've never heard of GwyRDDNi – either way there will be ample opportunities for anyone living in Llŷn to get involved. Visit www.gwyRDDni.cymru to read more, or follow GwyRDDNi on social media. Why not reach out and take part in this new and exciting opportunity to co-create a healthy and happy future for the next generations here in Pen Llŷn.
